PART I

INTRODUCTION TO ATLAS MATERIALS

iii

1. Summary

The investigations represented in this report achieved mixed results, which can be summarized:

(1) the effort expended in securing and verifying the locations of larger manufacturing plants yielded 5,000-plus usable entries, in addition to certain valuable conclusions about the general feasibility of obtaining ground information by economic sector;
(2) on the basis of the number and the quality of the usable entries obtained, the resources expended in this pilot study on nonmanufacturing sectors (about three-eighths of the usable entries) and on historical data (about two-thirds of the usable entries) cannot be wholly justified; and
(3) even without the 5,000-odd locations of completely satisfactory quality (largely manufacturing and educational institutions), the relatively modest cost of this pilot study secured enough data to provide a sound basis for obtaining feasibly and systematically some appropriate ground information on almost any economic or social activity, together with some indication of their relative areal and economic significance.

2. Objectives

The stated objective of this study was the preparation, in the form of an atlas-catalog of Universal Transverse Mercator grid coordinate locations, of an outline description of the Houston Area Test Site, building on the manufacturing sector and expanding along agreed lines as far as possible.

An implied, secondary objective was the treatment of this study as a pilot project which ideally would assess the feasibility of developing, within a limited budget of resources, a methodology for assembling groundbased data, by economic and social sector, which might be used to supplement the results and refine the techniques of remote sensing employed in the NASA Earth Observations Applications Project.

3. Approach

Because the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas at Austin is the single primary source in the state for regularly collected and published data on individual manufacturers and manufacturing plants, the manufacturing sector was conceived from the beginning as the principal basis of this study. In addition to providing certain information on individual manufacturers to accompany precise plant locations, the Bureau of Business Research undertook to examine the feasibility of collecting a greater or lesser amount of information on several other phenomena. The first group among these nonmanufacturing activities were those included in the original research proposal:

banks
energy-materials processing newspapers

The Bureau of Business Research was to provide location data in these categories for each of the following years, where possible: 1972, 1971, 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, and 1946.

The second group of nonmanufacturing activities comprised a rather loose, unsystematic list of desirable possibilities drawn up during the contract negotiations and later discussions with the Technical Advisor. The Bureau of Business Research engaged to examine each of these sectors and attempt to include current significant data for as many of them as possible among the Atlas Materials. This second group included:

cemeteries churches feedlots
government lands (significant tracts) hospitals and clinics minerals and fuels production nursing and convalescent homes recreational lands sanitary land fill schools shopping centers
transport features (airports, railroad facilities, and others)

As a practical matter of resources allocation, the project broke down into two distinct divisions: the development of the manufacturing data and locations; the application of the remaining time and manpower to the nonmanufacturing activities.

Within the limits of time and travel funds, the fieldwork component of the location process was also divided between manufacturing and nonmanufacturing.

The inescapable emphasis on the manufacturing data is reflected to some extent in the distribution of usable entries among the various categories in the Atlas Materials.

A brief outline of the economic structure of the Houston Area Test Site, followed by a description and analysis of the Atlas Materials, will help to demonstrate the adequacy of these materials.

4. Houston Area Test Site

Located on the upper Gulf coast of Texas, the Houston Area Test Site comprises these eighteen counties in the general Houston area: Austin, Brazoria, Brazos, Burleson, Chambers, Colorado, Fort Bend, Galveston, Grimes, Harris, Liberty, Matagorda, Montgomery, San Jacinto, Walker, Waller, Washington, and Wharton. Seven of these counties comprise the three Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas located in the Houston Area Test Site. These SMSA's and their component counties are: Bryan-College Station (Brazos); Galveston-Texas City (Galveston); and Houston (Brazoria, Fort Bend, Harris, Liberty, and Montgomery).

According to the 1970 census, the Houston Area Test Site contained a population of 2,410,482 persons in April, 1970, of whom 82.3 per cent (1,985,031) lived in the Houston SMSA (see Table 1). Including some 15,719 square miles (40,712 square kilometers), this region varies considerably in topography, vegetation, and land use. In the heavily wooded northeast, for example, San Jacinto County has a population density of only 10.7 persons per square mile. At the other extreme of both physical aspect and settlements patterns, the Galveston-Texas City SMSA numbers more than 425 persons per square mile.

Some 315 named communities lie in the Houston Area Test Site; more than 160 of these towns are located in the five-county Houston SMSA.

An accurate description of a complex regional economy is almost impossible in a small space. One type of data is available, however, which fairly accurately exhibits economic structure. The Office of Business Economics publishes a series on personal income by counties and SMSA's. Personal income is defined as earnings plus property income and transfer payments and less social insurance contributions. The difficulty in using personal income estimates arises principally from the problems posed by transfer payments, income for which no services are rendered. Social security payments, unemployment insurance, veterans' benefits, and direct relief represent transfer payments, which largely prevent personal income from providing a precise measure of economic activity. These payments are based on previous or projected future economic activity, or they represent social efforts to prevent or alleviate hardship.

Table 2 presents a related measure of economic activity, total earnings, which differs from personal income to the extent that it comprises only the sum of wages and salaries plus other labor income plus proprietors' income. The only omitted component of personal income for which services are rendered by firms and individuals is property income, which includes dividends, personal interest, and rental income. In addition to direct monetary earnings from real property, rental income includes imputed net rental returns to owner-occupants of nonfarm dwellings. Royalties paid for patents, copyrights, and rights to natural resources are also included in property income. For the purposes of this study, which is concerned with the physical existence and extent of improved and unimproved real property and the activities carried on by tenants.

With that single and significant exception, total earnings reflects all present economic activity—to the extent, of course, that the data are at least roughly accurate and their assumptions tenable. Total earnings data classified according to broad industrial sector exhibit in usefully simple fashion the structure of a regional economy, especially an economy in which the structure has undergone rapid change. The data in Table 2 have been further grouped into the conventional classifications of economic activity.

Considering only the structure and not the level of total earnings, one learns immediately from Table 2 that the significance of all primary economic activities, including oil and gas extraction, has declined considerably during the last thirty years. Because total earnings in the contract construction sector fluctuate violently over time, the significant variations in secondary economic activities are those in manufacturing, the share of which has increased 50 percent between 1940 and 1970. Primary and secondary activities together make up about four-tenths of total earnings now, just as they did in 1940. All primary activities, however, declined during the 30 years ending with 1970, losing roughly two-thirds of their 1940 share. That portion of the share lost by primary activities, in fact, almost precisely equals the share gained by secondary economic activities.

The share of total earnings attributable to tertiary activities during this period has remained remarkably constant. The major adjustments within the tertiary sector have been the modest rise in government, apparently at the expense of wholesale and retail trade, and the considerable gain in the share of total earnings enjoyed by the services industries.

Considering the present structure of the economy in the Houston Area Test Site, therefore—to the rather crude extent that that structure has been outlined in the preceding paragraphs—the usable results of this study are not inconsistent with the shape and proportion of the regional economy.

5. Atlas Materials: General

In the case of each sector which was examined, the principal aim of the Bureau of Business Research was to determine whether any of these goals could be achieved:

(1) draw up an inventory of the sector, on a basis sufficiently systematic and objective to provide for the establishment of some criterion of "significance";
(2) obtain from sources other than fieldwork enough information about each potential list to permit most of the entries to be located on the project base maps and provided with UTM grid-cell coordinates;
(3) reduce to reasonable proportions the field work necessary to complete most of the entries left unfinished after step (2).

Of the several sectors investigated, eleven, including manufacturing, could feasibly be carried through these three steps. Following is an outline of these categories and their major subcategories, together with a round-number total of entries for each sector. These are the categories and numbers of entries which comprise the Atlas Materials section of this report. They are enumerated here in the order in which they are treated in the text and in the order in which their respective Atlas Materials are arranged.

Because each of these sectors is treated in the following several pages, the remaining space in this section will be devoted to the entire project and to the problems which elimated some of those sectors investigated but not included.

All of the appropriate and available topographic maps of the United States Geological Survey were employed in this project. In both the 7-1/2-minute and 15-minute series and the 1:24,000 and 1:62,500 scales, the USGS topographic maps covering the study area include roughly 275 quadrangles. The principal additional map references were the Army Map Service 1:250,000 series topographic maps, in which the following sheets include the Houston Area Test Site: Austin, Texas; Bay City, Texas; Beaumont, Texas; Beeville, Texas; Houston Texas; Palestine, Texas; Louisiana; and Seguin, Texas. With appropriate mapping aids, these maps were used as reference sources for UTM coordinates.

In building an inventory for any economic or social category, the single greatest problem is the fact that systematic research can be used in only a minority of cases. Several hundred churches, for example, were located, in both office and field, but this category was eventually abandoned. The only uniformly available sources of lists of churches in all denominations were telephone directories. Field work quickly revealed, however, that many churches exist which either do not have telephones or do not list their numbers. Although some churches, with their adjacent grounds, are fairly extensive, most of them are not. Their significance lies in their large number and their universality. Collectively, they cover a significant area, in comparison to some other cultural features. The only systematic method of limiting an inventory of churches however, short of exhaustive ground and aerial inspection, would be along denominational lines, because only some denominations publish or otherwise collect exhaustive information on the names and locations of many individual churches. An approach through this method, however, would be both irrelevant and offensive. Although many more churches could have been added to the preliminary list, the additions would have come largely through field inspection. The lists would have continued to represent unknown shares of unknown totals. No physical criteria could have been effectively applied to all potentially usable church entries, because even the directories available from some denominational groups provide no information on relative size and areal extent of church buildings and grounds. The investigation of churches was one of several studies concerning sectors presenting similar problems.

A somewhat different and largely conceptual problem arose with contract construction, to choose another example. Some basis existed for building workable lists of significant construction contractors in the Houston Area Test Site, but the headquarters structures and grounds of these contractors, it may be fairly argued, do not represent the physical manifestation of the contract construction sector of economic activity. A better representation, perhaps, is the sum of all construction sites at any given moment. These lists could not be generated nor the conceptual problems solved in the time available to nonmanufacturing sectors.

Topographic maps will yield directly a great deal of information, especially that concerning churches, schools, cemeteries, certain public lands and structures, reservoirs, canals. In some instances, lists were actually initiated or largely completed solely on the basis of the topographic maps. The information on some maps is many years obsolete, though, and no consistently accurate picture of a large region can be built up with no more information than that contained on such a large set of topographic maps as those embracing the Houston Area Test Site. The problem remained, in this instance, the basic list.

Working from the maps, an investigator cannot even begin with an inventory which is accurate, or which reflects the topographic maps accurately, as of a certain date, because all of the publication and revision dates are different. To be used as an inventory reflecting any given year, therefore, lists built up from topographic maps would have to be checked and supplemented exhaustively from other sources. These other sources could just as feasibly, perhaps more feasibly, form the initial basis of the effort in these particular sectors.

Considerable investigation, including fieldwork, was carried out on nonfuel minerals production. The only satisfactory data which could be generated concerned sulfur production. These were omitted because they were so few in number and because the inclusion of other mineral production, largely sand and gravel, would have involved unrealistic amounts of fieldwork and, eventually, of guesswork, for enterprises which are of little overall significance and, usually, of modest areal extent.

Although a statewide inventory of sanitary land fills exists, these data were found to be obsolete and incomplete. The survey was not complete at the time that it was made, and it is now several years old. Furthermore, the individual sites were neither described nor located satisfactorily. Further work in this area would have amounted to carrying out a new and exhaustive survey over all 18 counties in the HATS.

The most troublesome single fact about this project is that known features, some of them known even to their precise locations, could not always be included feasibly, even when their bulk and area were significant, and even when independent data supported their economic significance. Grain and rice drying and handling facilities fell into this category. The areal significance of certain government properties is obvious even on maps: old Fort Crockett in Galveston, for example. On account of their extremely large number and variety, their economic and social significance, and their frequently large area, government-owned properties of all kinds comprise a category which would justify a considerable expenditure in an effort of this kind.

Another problem is inherent but troublesome. The manufacturing sector yielded about 5,430 usable entries for seven different years. Clearly 90 percent or more of these entries ought to require no field work, unless the cost is to be prohibitive. Thus some 5,000-odd manufacturing locations in this project were achieved in the office, using maps, street locators, and other reference sources. Because the areal extent of the property occupied by a manufacturing plant is by no means always obvious, even through ground or air inspection, point location rather than cell identification might be more accurate. When an investigator locates, at his desk, 5402 Alpha Street, Betaville, Gamma County, Texas, he can only locate a point—the front door of the establishment, as nearly as he can find it. However misleading, this precision is immediately lost if the front door is identified only according to the nearest square kilometer (about 247 acres) in which it lies. Although field inspection theoretically can refine these errors, it can do so only for current information. The only accuracy even theoretically attainable for some historical locations no longer occupied is the precise location of the street address, the front door.

One conclusion which must be drawn from the experience of this project is that historical information generally is difficult and unrewarding. Far more effort—effort which is sometimes altogether unrewarded—goes into each potential historical location than must be expended on present locations.

6. Atlas Materials: Banks

Although locations were to be provided for banks for 1972 (if possible), 1971, 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, and 1946, satisfactory and comparable data on all of the banks in the Houston Area Test Site was not located for 1950 and 1946. A less than ideal arrangement obtains in the Atlas Materials for banks, one with which no other section is afflicted. The year headings refer to the year of publication of the source and not, as they ought, to the year to which the data refer. Thus the 1972 entries include data as of December 31, 1971, the 1971 entries include data as of December 31, 1970, and so on.

About 950 entries are included in the section on banks. Some 220 of these are for the latest year, and about 640 of the entries refer to the Houston SMSA. Had the need and desirability been anticipated sooner, this section would have profited from the inclusion of savings and loan company headquarters and branch offices. This supplemental information could have been provided without much more office or field work. The number of entries about financial institutions would have been increased substantially, considering the fact that 138 savings and loan locations existed in the Houston Area Test Site at last count, compared to 220 banks.

The banking entries include these four items of information:

Name of bank
Street address
City address
Deposits in dollars
UTM location

The section is presented by year, with the latest year first. Within each year, the entries are arranged alphabetically by town and/or SMSA. The same geographic arrangement is projected backward through all years, so that Conroe, for example, in Montgomery County, will never be found under "C" but always under "H", in the Houston SMSA, even though Montgomery County was not included in the Houston SMSA until 1965.

7. Atlas Materials: Educational Institutions

Current (1972) locations have been provided for some 930 schools and colleges said by the Texas Education Agency to be in the Houston Area Test Site. No schools have been deliberately omitted. The list is intended to include all public and private elementary and secondary schools and all public and private colleges and universities.

The total comprises roughly 900 schools and 30 colleges, about 675 of which are in the Houston SMSA.

The following four items of information are included in the educational entries:

Name of school or college
Street address
City address
UTM location

Practically all school buildings used for any educational purpose are included. In several communities, for example, certain school buildings have been given over to special teaching or administrative functions. School administrative buildings generally have not been included.

Because published information about school locations is frequently inadequate, an extremely high proportion of the school locations–perhaps 20 percent or more–are based on field inspection.

Schools of all sorts frequently are surrounded by rather large grounds. The problem of identifying these tracts is lessened not only by field inspection but also because many schools, especially the older ones, appear on topographic maps. Most of the older schools in and near inner cities are limited in areal extent by surrounding development.

The educational entries are subdivided under "schools" and "colleges". Within each of these subsections, the entries are arranged alphabetically within counties, and, within counties, the sequence is alphabetical according to school district.

8. Atlas Materials: Energy-Materials Production and Processing

Crude oil and natural gas are the principal energy materials produced in the Houston Area Test Site. Largely for conceptual reasons, natural gas liquids are not included in this group. An anomalous group of products anyway, natural gas liquids are more properly considered in this context as the products of a secondary economic activity, natural-gas processing, which is considered to be manufacturing in the Standard Industrial Classification.

The significant energy-materials processing in this region is limited to crude-oil refining, natural-gas processing, and the production of electricity in thermal electric plants. No hydro plants exist in the Houston Area Text Site.

Including some 410 entries, the Atlas Materials concerning energy are grouped under these headings:

crude-oil production
natural-gas production crude-oil refining natural-gas processing
electric power generation

For the purposes of these Atlas Materials, a major oil field is defined as one in which the 1971 annual production amounted to at least 1,825,000 barrels, the equivalent of an average daily production of 5,000 barrels. A "field" is arbitrarily defined as a group of reservoirs sharing the same general name, according to the Railroad Commission tabulations.

The oil fields oil-field entries include this information:

Name of field (general name)
County location
Production in 1971, in barrels per day
UTM location

These entries are arranged alphabetically by county.

A major gas field is defined according to the same assumptions underlying the oil-field selections. Employing the widely used equivalence of 6,000 cubic feet of natural gas = 1 barrel of crude oil, a conversion which assumes a weighted average heat value of 967 Btu per cubic foot of natural gas (given a barrel of crude at 5,800,000 Btu), the investigators defined a major gas field as one which produced at least 10,950 million cubic feet during 1971, the equivalent of 30 million cubic feet per day.

The gas-field entries include this information:

Name of field (general name)
County location
Production in 1971, in thousand cubic feet per day
UTM location

These entries are also arranged alphabetically by counties.

The crude-oil refining section undertakes to list and provide locations for all of the operating refineries in the Houston Area Test Site as of January 1, 1972, 1971, 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, and 1947. Because tabulations from a common source do not exist for 1946, 1947 was chosen. The U.S. Bureau of Mines, the source of this information, issued a tabulation for January 1, 1941, and did not follow this one up until the tabulation as of January 1, 1947.

The crude-oil refining entries include this information:

Name of company owning refinery
Street address
City address
Operating crude-oil distillation capacity, in barrels per calendar day
UTM location

The refining entries are arranged by year and within each year alphabetically by town and/or SMSA.

The investigators encountered two principal difficulties in attempting to work up a historical series of gas-processing plants and their locations. The first of these was the shifting meanings of the phrase, "gas-processing plant," a term which is not even defined consistently at any one time. The second of these problems was the difficulty of locating a single, consistent statistical series which met all of the requirements and also covered enough years. In the circumstances, neither problem was resolved.

Two different sources were used, as follows:

Oil and Gas Journal: 1972, 1971, 1970, 1965
U.S. Bureau of Mines: 1960, 1950, 1946

Gas-processing plants are the most numerous of energy-processing facilities, amounting to 260 of the 380 or so entries in the processing sections of the energy Atlas Materials. The data are as of January 1 of the year shown and include:

Name of company owning plant
Name of plant
Address or other location, where known
County location
Operating capacity or liquids output

1972, 1971, 1970, 1965: operating capacity in millions of cubic feet per day

1960, 1950, 1946: liquids output in gallons per day

UTM location

Gas-processing plants are arranged alphabetically by county.

Data on major electric-generating facilities is provided for 1971 (the latest available year), 1970, 1965, and 1960. Although information was located for some earlier years, complete and consistent information could not be obtained for 1950 and 1946, and these years were omitted.

One significant omission from this section is the larger examples of privately owned industrial power plants, plants which exist only to supply power to an industry or a related complex of industries. Reliable information cannot be secured on these plants.

No hydroelectric plant exists in the Houston Area Test Site, and no electric cooperative maintains a plant in the HATS. Only three towns of any significance generate, or have generated, their own power. These are Brenham, Bryan-College Station, and Liberty. Neither Brenham nor Liberty were still operating their own plants in 1972. The City of Bryan operates a single thermal electric plant with a 1970 capacity of 120,500 kilowatts.

Among the privately owned utilities, only the Houston Lighting & Power Company operated plants in the eighteen-county study area in 1972. These plants are located in Fort Bend, Galveston, and Harris Counties.

The entries in the electric-power generation subsection are arranged by year and county and include the following:

Name of company owning plant
Name of plant
City address (nearest plant)
Operating capacity in megawatts
UTM location

9. Atlas Materials: Hospitals

About 100 hospital entries are included among the Atlas Materials. These entries include:

Name of hospital
Street address
City address
UTM location

Inadequate and contradictory source materials prevented the incorporation of data about the number of beds in each hospital.

The basis for this section is state licensing: all hospitals in the Houston Area Test Site which had been licensed by the Hospital Licensing Division of the Texas State Department of Health as of June 1972 are included. Of the total of about 100 institutions, 70 are in the five-county Houston SMSA. The number of hospitals which are omitted are considered to be significant neither in number nor in areal extent.

The only reference for this section, other than general sources of information, such as telephone directories and maps, is:

Texas State Department of Health, Hospital Licensing Division. Licensed Hospitals of Texas, as of June 1972. Austin: Texas State Department of Health, 1972.

10. Atlas Materials: Manufacturing

The principal basis of the project, manufacturing entries comprise about 63 percent of the total number of entries in the Atlas Materials. Altogether some 5,430 entries have been included for the years 1972, 1971, 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, and 1946. Although the project originally contemplated the location of all known manufacturers, and many hundreds of smaller plants actually were located, it was agreed mutually, in conversation with the Technical Monitor, that the quality and significance of the total package would be enhanced by the omission of all manufacturers known to employ fewer than 25 persons in the year to which the data refer. Thus the same plant of the same manufacturer, even when it was founded earlier than the latest year for which data are shown, does not necessarily appear in more than one year. The individual years, like the individual sector inventories, were made up independently of one another. If a plant did not reveal the size of its work force in one year, or claimed fewer than 25 employees, that plant was not listed in that year, although the same plant may appear in an earlier year. A later section treats in more detail the whole question of duplication of listings.

About 2,850 manufacturers of all sizes are known to exist in the Houston Area Test Site in 1972. For that same year, the Manufacturing Atlas Materials include about 1,020 entries for manufacturers employing more than 25 persons. This ratio suggests that a list of all manufacturers for the seven years included would run to at least 15,000 entries.

The entries for 1972, 1971, and 1970 total more than 3,000, about 56 percent of the total number of manufacturing locations presented. About 4,790 of these locations, or more than 88 percent, are in the Houston SMSA.

The basis for the manufacturing inventory is the annual Directory of Texas Manufacturers, which has been compiled and published by the Bureau of Business Research for about 40 years. Because the Directory has been improved continuously, and because the degree of cooperation of the manufacturers has increased greatly, the quality of the data in the later directories, especially those for about the last 15 years, is much superior to the older ones. Especially with the data for 1950 and 1946, a considerable quantity of work was necessary to supplement and update the information in the Directory of Texas Manufacturers. The Standard Industrial Classification, for example, has undergone radical changes since 1946. To be able to provide for all years SIC classification data consistent with the current SIC, "translations" had to be carried out of all of the older SIC designations.

In this section, as in all others in which SMSA's are used, present (1972) definitions are extended backward and a common arrangement imposed on all of the material. The manufacturing materials are arranged by years, going backward from 1972. Within each year, the entries are arrayed according to the closest town, alphabetically by towns and SMSA's.

The copy closing date for the 1972 Directory of Texas Manufacturers, which was typical in this respect, was February 15, 1972. Manufacturing data for 1972 therefore represents—or the source material represented—everything which could be learned and verified about each manufacturer by mid-February of that year.

In this section, as in others, the use of historical data along with current information raises some questions which ought to be pursued to conclusion if any further work with historical data is contemplated. Especially in a region which has become highly industrialized fairly recently, (compared to some other regions), one might question the validity of using the same criteria for selection in both 1972 and 1946. If a plant with 25 or more employees in 1972 is genuinely a major plant, then surely the same plant would have been almost gigantic in 1946, especially outside of Houston. Even when only one year is considered, Houston almost demands different criteria than other parts of the Houston Area Test Site.

These items of information are included for each of the manufacturing entries:

Name of company or division
Street address
City address
SIC code(s)
UTM location

In those instances in which one of these items does not appear or is incomplete, the data were unavailable or unverifiable.

Probably fewer than 10 percent of the manufacturing entries required field inspection, although several entries would undoubtedly be modified on the basis of field inspection, probably by revising upward the area covered by certain plants.

In addition to many of the general sources already listed, as well as maps, telephone directories, chambers of commerce, correspondence, telephone conversations, personal interviews, and field observation, the following sources were basic for the manufacturing data:

The University of Texas, Bureau of Business Research. Directory of Texas Manufacturers 1972. 2 vols. Austin: Bureau of Business Research, 1972.

———. Directory of Texas Manufacturers 1971. 2 vols. Austin: Bureau of Business Research, 1971.

———. Directory of Texas Manufacturers 1946. Austin: Bureau of Business Research, 1946.

11. Atlas Materials: Newspapers

About 310 locations for newspapers (reporting circulation) are included, covering the years 1972, 1971, 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, and 1946. About 140 of them represent the Houston SMSA, and 43 are newspapers existing and reporting circulation in 1972.

This inventory specifically excludes school, labor union, fraternal, and other special-interest newspapers, or magazines in newspaper format, which do not circulate to a general audience.

The information provided in these entries includes:

Name of newspaper
Street address
City address
Circulation
UTM location

In general, the only sources used for these data were:

N. W. Ayer & Sons. Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals 1972. Philadelphia: N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., 1972.

_____. Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals 1971. Philadelphia: N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., 1971.

_____. Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals 1970. Philadelphia: N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., 1970.

_____. Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals 1950. Philadelphia: N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., 1950.

_____. Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals 1946. Philadelphia: N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., 1946.

12. Atlas Materials: Nursing and Convalescent Homes

Covering the year 1972, the Atlas Materials include locations for about 110 nursing and convalescent homes, 75 of which are in Brazoria, Fort Bend, Harris, Liberty, and Montgomery Counties—the Houston SMSA. Every nursing home licensed by the Division of Nursing and Convalescent Homes of the Texas State Department of Public Health is entered, and these data are provided:

Name of nursing home
Street address
City address
UTM location

The entries are arranged alphabetically by city and SMSA, and by cities within SMSA's. Missing components of individual entries are those which could not be found or verified.

As with hospitals, information on the number of beds could not feasibly be provided, on account of inaccuracies and lack of data.

13. Atlas Materials: Office Buildings

The 100 office-building locations included in the Atlas Materials include most identifiable buildings with considerable lease space in the Houston Area Test Site and exclude all buildings with less than 200,000 square feet of office space. Two other significant exclusions need to be mentioned. Buildings of any size which are largely or exclusively owner-occupied and lease no space to outsiders have not been considered. Buildings outside the City of Houston, whatever their size, also have been omitted. These omissions were largely practical and not the result of some conceptual peculiarity. The Houston Chamber of Commerce made available some good lists of office buildings from which a basic inventory could be built. The time available for the nonmanufacturing sectors generally did not permit large-scale supplementation of these lists.

These entries include:

Name of building
Street address
UTM location

The office buildings section, because it includes exclusively Houston locations, is arranged alphabetically by the name of the building.

The office buildings data are based largely on these sources:

Bank of the Southwest, Industrial Development Department. Houston's Office Space Requirements and Projections, 1950-1990. Houston: Bank of the Southwest, 1972.

Houston Chamber of Commerce, Industry and Commerce Department. "Houston Office Buildings: Central Business District." Multilithed. Houston: Houston Chamber of Commerce, 1972.

14. Atlas Materials: Shopping Centers

Some 230 shopping centers were located; all but about 25 of these are in the Houston SMSA. This list reflects 1972 circumstances and includes a few centers under construction at the time of their inclusion but expected to be complete by late 1972 or early 1973.

The list is limited to shopping centers with 50,000 square feet or more of available lease space. These data are included in each entry:

Name of shopping center (if known and verified)
Street address
City address
UTM location

This section is arranged alphabetically by town and SMSA.

Partly because many of them had to be verified in the field, these locations generally define the entire tract of land occupied by the shopping center and its parking lots and other service areas.

15. Atlas Materials: State Parks and Wildlife Facilities

The only salvageable portion of a disappointing enterprise, this section includes only about ten exclusively state-owned parks and wildlife facilities. They are alphabetized by county.

A great many parks and park locations were tabulated early in the project, but the difficulties of building these inventories is even greater than the problems connected with exclusively government developments. The public parks and recreational areas alone are a great problem. The Federal and State governments, counties, and cities all own parks and other outdoor recreational facilities, many of which can be readily located on topographic maps. A great many private developments—country clubs, subdivision parks, stables, polo grounds, marinas, lakes, lodges, entire recreational complexes (Astroworld, Busch Gardens)—also belong in this category. These developments occupy considerable space in the aggregate and often individually. No systematic method exists, however, of identifying and describing these developments of such widely varied aspect and ownership.

Grouped according to four classifications (State Parks, Wildlife Services, Wildlife Management Areas, and Other Facilities), this inventory is alphabetized by county, and each entry includes this information:

Name of park or feature
County location
UTM location

Those entries which were included are based largely on:

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. Public Facilities Directory. Austin: Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, 1971.

16. Atlas Materials: Transport Features

The description and location of representative transport features, for the purposes of this project, presented several problems. The major problem arises from the fact that so many transport features are linear: railroads, highways, canals, waterways. Identifying and naming hundreds, perhaps thousands, of individual UTM grid cells over several hundred miles of linear features is a resource allocation of questionable validity.

Within the limitations of the nonmanufacturing portion of this project, these three transport features eventually were included:

(1) airports (public)
(2) intercity bus terminals (self-contained)
(3) rail yards (excluding smaller, less-used yards)

Of the total of about 90 features, 50 are in the Houston SMSA.
The airport entries include:

Name of airport
City location
UTM location

Airport entries are arranged alphabetically by city and SMSA.

The information given about each intercity bus terminal comprises:

Name(s) of line(s) using terminal
Street address
City address
UTM location

These entries are arranged alphabetically by city and SMSA.
The rail yard descriptions include these data:

Name of railroad
Name of yard (when known)
City location
UTM location

These are arranged alphabetically by railroad within the city-SMSA alphabetization.
These references were used in preparing the locations of transport features:

17. Atlas Materials: Duplications

No effort has been made to eliminate known duplications of entries in one sector with those in another, for two reasons. First, the sections were prepared independently of one another, and to throw out certain items in one sector because they are duplicated in another would compromise the criteria for selection in the first section. Second, though all sections include data for the most recent year (1971 or 1972), certain sections and subsections also include data for one or more of the following years: 1970, 1965, 1960, 1950, 1947, 1946. These involve some duplication which is unavoidable because comparable lists are being drawn up for different years.

The only purpose of this section, beyond conveying the explanation in the first paragraph, is to explain the circumstances of the known and foreseen duplications.

Refineries and gas-processing plants with more than 25 employees appear in the appropriate manufacturing lists as well as in the inventories of crude-oil refining and natural-gas processing facilities. The last two categories, of course, include many more plants than the relatively small number of duplications.

Newspapers involve two different types of duplication. First, newspapers with job printing plants are classified as manufacturers. To appear in the manufacturing-sector Atlas Materials, however, a newspaper must have its own printing plant and employ more than 25 persons.

18. Atlas Materials: Qualifications

In addition to those already adumbrated in earlier sections of this text, certain qualifications ought to be asserted or repeated regarding these Atlas Materials.

The quality of these locations is not comparable. Those data for the most recent years are generally more accurate and better documented than those for earlier years, especially 1946 and 1950. Although this qualification does not refer exclusively to manufacturing, the manufacturing entries are the most significant and the most numerous. Furthermore, only a few sections include data from 1946 and 1950, and only the Manufacturing Atlas Materials include large numbers of locations for these years.

A useful example is the Humble refinery at Baytown, which is listed seven times in the Manufacturing and seven times in the Energy-Materials Production and Processing. The site defined in each of these 14 entries is identical and includes 27 UTM cells. These locations are intended to reflect circumstances at selected moments over a span of 26 years. Although this site may well have expanded or otherwise modified its size, configuration, or location during 1946-1972, the Atlas Materials imply that the site remained unchanged throughout this period. The justification for this and similar assumptions is that the possibility of occasional minor errors is outweighed by the time and expense required to determine precise boundaries during each of seven years.

Because all 1972 locations are based on the most recently published maps and other materials or on ground observation, or both, the Atlas Materials for the more recent years (say, 1970-1972) are considerably less vulnerable to errors arising from faulty assumptions than are the data reflecting 1946-1965. The most sound entries are those based on ground observation in 1972. These entries generally are compromised only in those instances in which circumstances prevented a complete or accurate determination of the precise limits of the tracts in question.

Even in those instances in which Atlas Materials entries are arrayed according to Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas for years other than 1972, SMSA definitions as of 1972 have been used. Consistency of geographic definition over time was considered essential for meaningful areal comparisons. Deliberate anachronisms have therefore been introduced. Thus Freeport, in Brazoria County, which was not a part of the Houston SMSA in 1960, is nonetheless alphabetized within the Houston SMSA subsections in all years.

Because the Standard Industrial Classification has been revised frequently since 1946, consistency demanded that the 1972 Standard Industrial Classification Manual serve as the basis for all SIC data accompanying manufacturing entries for all years. Therefore, SIC data in the manufacturig data sources were translated to the 1972 basis. Such a process always involves certain imprecision, especially for the earlier years, when several current classifications did not even exist. Thus the best judgement of the authors governed the assignment of appropriate SIC code numbers to manufacturing data published before the most recent revisions of the SIC.

19. Atlas Materials: Recommendations

On the basis of this contribution to the development of an economic atlas of the Houston Area Test Site, the authors offer three specific recommendations. These are forwarded in the conviction that this study has demonstrated the feasibility of developing economic data based on ground observation for input into an earth resource survey information system. The recommendations are enumerated roughly in ascending order of significance.

The first recommendation concerns the treatment of historical data. As of the end of 1972 (as this report is written), data earlier than 1970 might fairly be considered "historical." The most recent quantitative data which are available for some specific need are frequently two or three years old and are therefore "current"—practically, if not theoretically. The effective currency of some information can be maintained longer and more effectively if an annual series is built up. The problem of tracing entities through mergers and name changes, for example, as well as the problems arising from changes in precise physical locations and configurations, are greatly simplified if one is seeking values for, say, 1965-1972. It is much more difficult and inherently inaccurate to secure data which include time gaps, such as 1965 and 1970-1972. This circumstance contributes heavily to the feasibility of collecting and maintaining economic data on an annual basis. Furthermore, data are frequently published in at least two different versions—preliminary and revised, or final. Unless the data collection and maintenance mechanism is designed to make feasible the substitution of final data for preliminary data, the system is apt to receive and endless series of preliminary figures, or—what is perhaps worse—a hopelessly confused mixture of preliminary and revised figures.

If an economic sector in an area about which a great deal is known or can be learned—manufacturing adjacent to the Houston Ship Channel, for example—is considered sufficiently significant to warrant the study of historical trends, such an undertaking ought to be pursued separately, apart from any larger study or continuing survey and data-collection process. A study of an entire region in all of its aspects, or a study of manufacturing throughout a region including the Houston Ship Channel, would be too broad in scope to offer the proper setting for a detailed analysis over time of one aspect of the development of the one locale. The criteria selected for the larger study—larger geographically or sectorally—will and ought to be different from those which should inform a narrower and deeper inquiry. In addition to field inspection and the other sources drawn upon for current information, historical studies demand frequently exhaustive and usually rather unsystematic use of telephone directories, newspaper files, city and area directories, maps and map files of public and private agencies, personal interviews, and the periodicals, files, and miscellaneous publications of chambers of commerce and other public and private agencies.

To be as useful as possible, historical data require more accuracy throughout. When analysis of these data reveals changes, one must be able to say confidently that apparent changes reflect actual circumstances and not merely the possible range of error of the basic data.

Some historical changes are easier to trace if the data are examined annually, or if the effort is made to reconstruct annual figures, whether all of these are ultimately wanted or not. Here, for example, is the capsuled history of an imaginary manufacturer:

1960: Alpha, Inc. founded, occupies 50 acres
Sales: $7 million

1963: Alpha, Inc. expands site to 60 acres
Sales: $10 million

1965: Alpha, Inc. sells 15 acres, now occupies 45 acres
Sales: $13 million

1968: Alpha, Inc. acquired by Beta Instruments, changes name to Omega Controls. Beta acquires 20 acres adjacent to original Alpha tract and Omega Controls now occupies 65 acres
Sales: $21 million

1970: Omega Controls occupies 69 acres, having acquired 12 and sold 8
Sales: $28 million

Without rather careful analysis or independent information, a summary of manufacturers' names and locations in 1960, 1965, and 1970, based on a single source of primary data, is apt to include at least these errors in regard to Alpha-Omega:

1. The size and configuration of the site would probably reflect the 1968 circumstances (or the latest available map), and the entries for 1960 and 1965 would therefore be wrong in their implicit assumption that the site remained physically constant during these years.

2. The entries would indicate two different companies, rather than a continously exisiting single entity. The 1960 and 1965 entries would describe Alpha, and the 1970 entry would describe Omega. The search for a map of the company plant site might reveal the 1968 acquisition and name change. If this was one among hundreds or thousands of entries in several sectors, this error might go unnoticed altogether.

3. The sales figures would suggest that a two-year-old company, Omega, grossed $28 million in 1970, rather than revealing that Alpha-Omega, a ten-year-old entity, increased its sales from $7 million to $28 million between 1960 and 1970.

These rather obvious examples of the special problems presented by historical economic data can become quite serious when several hundred or a few thousand entries might be involved for each year.

In summary, accurate historical data are generally difficult to secure, and therefore they are expensive. They can be obtained, however, and their pursuit can be justified where trend analysis is considered sufficiently promising.

The second recommendation concerns the question of appropriate criteria for ground-observation economic data. The difficulty lies in dealing with variations in time, in space, and in economic or social sector. Criteria appropriate for a manufacturing plant in Harris County are not immediately and obviously relevant to the selection of retail establishments in San Jacinto County, for example.

As an example, one might consider an imaginary 1-kilometer-square grid cell in, say, Montgomery County. This area of some 247 acres is simple and relatively insignificant in 1946. Except for some county and private roadway, the only economic activity in the cell which can be in any way measured or otherwise described consists of commercial forest land and a small sawmill, the annual equivalent sales of which—in 1972 dollars—amount to some 200,000.

In 1972, however, these same 247 acres are given over to residential and commercial development. About three-fourths of the area includes part of a large suburban community, the homes in which are worth some $25 million in 1972 prices. The rest of the cell, some 62 acres, includes roads and streets, utilities, and commercial property, largely retail trade establishments grossing about $10 million annually.

In such a situation—extreme, but not unrealistically so for the HATS—criteria acceptable for 1972 clearly will be hopelessly irrelevant for 1946. The point is not so much that of growth or decline but of altogether altered land use and a completely revised basis for the economy.

In a problem of criteria-selection involving the whole area, however, the most recent circumstances ought to govern that selection, even if historical data are to be included. Two arguments support this assertion:

1. Inescapable irrelevance ought to be shifted into the past, where it is merely unfortunate: irrelevant criteria applied to present data are intolerable.

2. One of the fundamental purposes of selection is to reduce the universe of data to manageable proportions. Because present data are usually the most voluminous in a region which has not deteriorated utterly, it is to present data that the most restrictive criteria ought to be applied, regardless of the adverse effect of these criteria on historical information.

Any decision involving criteria for selection must ultimately stand or fall on the basis of available resources. In dealing with shopping centers in the HATS, for example one ought ideally to select a lower limit of size or annual gross sales which would admit to the inventory even a small shopping center in, say, Colorado County, which was of sufficient local significance as to make its omission difficult to justify on the county level. However ideal, though, a criterion which would admit such shopping centers would almost certainly founder on practical grounds. First, most such features would be too small to be significant in terms of the present remote-sensing techniques and interpretation. Second, the total number of these centers, especially in Houston and Harris County, would be too great to be manageable within any reasonable budget. Within a region as large as the HATS, a study exclusively concerned with shopping centers might justify such a criterion, which would probably yield upwards of a thousand entities.

Within the limits of budgetary and other practical restrictions, criteria for selection of economic and social data ought to be drawn up to insure as much consistency and uniformity as possible. Should these criteria prove unrealistic in the context of the entire earth resource survey information system, or for any other practical reason, they ought to be made even more restrictive. To criteria intended to govern the selection of economic and social data for input into an earth resource survey information system, these tests ought to be applied in turn:

1. conceptual ideals;

2. consistency, both internally and with other sectors and other elements and inputs of the system; and

3. practicability, in terms of budget, other aspects of the project, and susceptibility to continuous maintenance and updating.

Finally, in drawing up criteria for the selection of economic and social data, one might duly consider and attempt to resist the powerful bias exerted by phenomena for which quantitative data are readily and abundantly available. For a region such as HATS, for example, data on Frasch sulfur production can be got easily and arrayed by mine and by year from the beginning of production. Data on retail sales, however, which can be demonstrated to be much more significant, can be got at only with the greatest difficulty. Part of this difficulty is self-perpetuating, in that students of economic phenomena tend to concentrate, for their quantitative exercises, on phenomena for which adequate quantitative data already exist.

Finally, the authors recommend the development of economic/topographic models of certain types of landscape features which recur in the HATS and which are or may be too small, too various, or too ambiguous in their appearance to be reliably identified solely on the basis of remote sensing techniques. These models—or studies to investigate their feasibility—would be predicated on appropriately specific remote sensing technology and desired levels of detail. To choose a single example: it might be determined that no feature or type of feature would be considered which does not typically include at least 5 acres of land. In the case of a specific type of economic or social feature, the development of a model or models—or the investigation of the feasibility of this development—would work like this:

A sector or sectors would be mutually agreed upon: perhaps rice dryers, grain elevators, and rice and grain handling facilities. The HATS, or whatever region was under consideration, would then be surveyed superficially, not necessarily through ground observation, to determine the approximate size of the statistical universe: in this postulated case, the rough number of rice and grain facilities which occur in the region and which qualify for consideration under the prevailing degree of detail employed in the work based on remote sensing techniques.

The sector under consideration would then be analyzed qualitatively, to determine the basic types of development which occur in the region and to classify these types into some appropriately general framework. On the basis of this analysis, standard statistical practice, and any other relevant information, the investigators would determine the total number of facilities which ought to be analyzed in detail in order to represent fairly that particular sector as it is represented in the region under consideration. Perhaps this total might come to 100 rice and grain handling facilities.

These 100 features would then be analyzed and described in detail, including large-scale topographic mapping. A technique of description would be worked out which could be applied to other economic and social features as well, one in which all of the relevant descriptive data could be included. In the illustrative sector chosen here, those data might include, among other information: the size, configuration, and precise location of the tract; the number, size, and layout of the buildings and other structures, and the ratio of the land occupied by these features to the total tract; the appropriate description, within the sectoral classification framework, of the activities carried on at that location; the access to transport features, such as roads and railroads, and the particular physical relation and proximity to these features; the relation of the entire entity to urban development and any other features which might be appropriate to the project in hand.

The object of these investigations and the possible models which might be generated from them would be, of course, to provide typical profiles—largely topographic profiles described from the aerial point of view—of the various types of economic and social features common to the region under study. Such generally ambiguous features—ambiguous frequently from the ground as well as the air—as extremely large retail and wholesale trade complexes (other than shopping centers), various types of warehousing, and office and industrial parks might be made more readily identifiable if detailed profiles could be developed. Some of the many types of government and private facilities which recur frequently in this or any region—sewage treatment plants, pumping plants, power plants, substations, booster stations, water treatment plants—might profitably be studied in this fashion. Such studies need not be limited to HATS, or any single region. Properly designed, these studies could determine the feasibility of producing such models for use anywhere in the United States.

ATLAS MATERIALS

Note: The data in all sections are presented geographically. In those instances in which cities and SMSA's are used, 1972 definitions of SMSA's are imposed on all years. The arrangement is alphabetical by county, or alphabetical by city and SMSA, and alphabetical by city within each SMSA.

Data which are missing from entries, usually street addresses, were omitted because they could not be obtained or verified.
